

Acknowledgments

The acknowledgments section of The Boys of Riverside is a heartfelt expression of gratitude from the author to the many individuals and groups who contributed to the creation of the book. This project was deeply shaped by the author's immersive experience within the Riverside football community, and he takes the opportunity to thank all those who opened their lives to him. He extends his sincere appreciation to the players, coaches, and staff who allowed him to witness their journeys firsthand, from practices to high-stakes games. Without their openness and willingness to share their stories, this book would not have been possible. Additionally, the author acknowledges the behind-the-scenes contributions of many women, particularly those who are deaf, whose guidance, patience, and unwavering support played a significant role throughout the process. One such individual is Teresa Maxwell, a senior administrator at the California School for the Deaf, Riverside (CSDR), who went above and beyond by offering him a place to stay, allowing for a more profound and authentic connection to the community he was covering.

Further gratitude is extended to the dedicated staff at CSDR, whose efforts in accommodating the author's work were instrumental in shaping the narrative of this book. He recognizes former superintendent Nancy Hlibok Amann and athletics program head Laura Edwards for their unwavering support in facilitating his access to the school's programs and initiatives. The author also expresses deep appreciation for Erika Thompson, CSDR's communications head, who took the time to answer countless questions, ensuring the accuracy and depth of the book's content. Special recognition is given to Melika Angoorani, the author's American Sign Language (ASL) interpreter, who played a crucial role in bridging language and cultural gaps throughout the research and interview process. Alongside Melika, several other interpreters assisted in interviews, ensuring that the voices of the students, coaches, and staff were authentically represented. Their contributions provided a deeper understanding of the deaf experience, which was essential in accurately portraying the triumphs and challenges faced by the Riverside football team.

The author takes a moment to acknowledge his family, particularly his wife, whose unwavering encouragement and patience were invaluable throughout the demanding process of writing this book. Balancing the demands of extensive research, travel, and writing often required sacrifices, and he is especially grateful for her support during long stretches away from home. Special thanks are extended to The New York Times editor, Julie Bloom, who provided indispensable editorial guidance and ensured the project maintained its integrity and purpose. He also appreciates his colleagues at The Times for covering his responsibilities while he focused on completing this book, recognizing their teamwork as an essential part of the process. The contributions of the author's literary agent, Jane Dystel, and Knopf Doubleday editor, Jason Kaufman, are highlighted for their steadfast belief in the project and their keen editorial insights, which helped shape the final product. Their expertise and dedication were instrumental in refining the manuscript and bringing it to publication.

Beyond those directly involved in the book's production, the author expresses deep appreciation to experts at Gallaudet University and other organizations who provided valuable insights into Deaf Culture and education. Their knowledge and perspectives were crucial in presenting an accurate and respectful portrayal of the community at CSDR. Special thanks are also given to photographer Eric Melzer, whose ability to capture powerful, emotional moments added depth and authenticity to the book. His images brought the team's journey to life, complementing the written narrative and offering readers a visual connection to the story. Finally, the author acknowledges his parents, David and Isabelle, for instilling in him a passion for storytelling and social justice. He closes with immense gratitude toward the broader deaf community, whose warmth, resilience, and openness profoundly impacted his understanding of their world. Their unexpected kindness, willingness to share their experiences, and trust in him as a storyteller made this book possible, leaving a lasting impression that will remain with him for years to come.